The House vote was praised by icaragnan guerrilla leaders. In Costa Rica, José Davila Mem-

A spokesman for the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, based in Hon-duras, said Wednesday that U.S. aid should allow that rebel group to make a major move against the Sandinists in about three months. Sandinist officials said they were surprised at the margin of Wednesday's vote. A top official in the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry termed it a "much worse" result than expected and lamented that Congress had "shifted right of center-right."

A source close to Mr. Ortega said: "We were shocked. It was an error not to consider the reaction to the trip. We claim to understand imperialist thinking, but at that key moment, we didn't take it seriously." to a $480-million bridge loan for Argentina that is expected to be announced over the weekend. Argentina has a $4$-billion debt, the developing world's third largest. The loan, which is intended to tide Argentina over until it can begin receiving disbursements from the International Monetary Fund and international banks, was to have been triggered Tuesday when Argentina and the IMF agreed on an economic program. Twelve countries are participating in the loan, including Japan, France, Canada, Mexico and Brazii. The United States, whose contribution is $150 million, took the lead in arranging the package. German López, a spokesman for Defense Force, General Constand President Alfonsin, said Thursday Viljoen, described the raid as a sucthat the government would disclose stringent anti-inflation progra Friday and "all the steps necessary

The agreement still must be approved by the IMFs executive board and disbursements of the credit will not begin until August. The country paid $250 million in back interest this week that brought it current to Dec. 30, 1985. The central bank received a setback when a federal court of appeals ruled unconstitutional a directive freezing Argentina's dollar deposits for 120 days on May 17. Dollar deposits were frozen after Banco de Italia y Rio de La Plata, the nation's third-largest private bank, collapsed May 10.

The central bank devalued the peso by 18 percent Tuesday to boost exports and comply with reaommendations of the IMF to control inflation.

On Thursday night, Alfredo Concepcion, the central bank presi-dent, ordered a bank holiday for Friday. All transactions were to be halted, apparently to head off massive withdrawals. The move followed a day of iitters in the Buenos Aires financial markets. In the black market, the dollar shot up from 855 pesos to a peak of 1,100.

Both U.S. and Soviet Seem Disillusioned About an Early Thaw

By Jim Hoagland
Washington Past Service
MOSCOW — Soviet-American relations have failed to improve in an initial round of mutual probing by a new leadership in the Kremlin and the second-term Reagan administration, in the view of senior Soviet officials and analysts.

That probing appears to have reached a critical stage, where decisions by both sides could set the course of the Soviet-American relationship for the rest of the Reagan administration, in the view of the Soviet figures.

If anything, the tone of the relationship has become more strident as both sides appeared at first to move toward a get-acquainted meeting of their leaders and then backed away in mutual suspicion that the other side was laying a propaganda trap.

Force-Feeding of Sakharov Reported OTTAWA (UPI) — The Soviet dissident physicist, Andrei D. Sakharov, was force-fed, suffered a stroke and lost consciousness days after he began a hunger strike in May 1984, Dr. Sakharov's wife said in a letter that was read to reporters here Friday.

Tatiana Yankelevich, Dr. Sakharov's daughter, wept openly as she read portions of the letter, written in November by the physicist's wife, Yelfana G. Bonner. A copy of the letter, received Thursday by Mrs. Yankelevich was released publicly in Ottawa, where delegates from 35 countries are attending a human rights conference. The letter was sent to friends of the Sakharovs in the Soviet Union and made its way to Mrs. Yankelevich at her home in Massachusetts. her home in Massachusetts.

"On May It," the letter said, "he was force-fed, at first intravenous w then by tube through the nose ... all very exeruciating." According to letter, Dr. Sakharov had a stroke and lost consciousness and later exhibited symptoms associated with Parkinson's disease. Dr. Sakharov and his wife, who have been living in internal exile in Gorki, a city closed to foreigners 200 miles (325 kilometers) east of Moscow, have not been seen by friends or colleagues since Feb. 25.

U.S. Suspends Cuban Immigration

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration said Friday that it would suspend admission of Cuban immigrants to the United States. The move, which followed a disagreement with Havana over radio broadcasts to Cuba, virtually ended a refugee agreement reached in

About 1,000 Cubans who had received visas were immediately affected. About 300 others had already entered the United States.

The December accord had appeared to clear the way for up to 20,000 immigrants a year as well as 3,000 former political prisoners. About 2,500 so-called "undesimbles" from the 1980 "boatlift," some of them mentally ill or criminals, were to be accepted by Havana. Visa processing was to be

Soviet Says U.S. Envoy Was Spying

MOSCOW — Soviet authorities detained a U.S. diplomat who, the press agency Tass said Friday, had been caught conducting "a major espionage action." He was ordered to leave the Soviet Union.

In a dispatch attributed to the KGB, the security police. Tass identified the diplomat as Paul Stombaugh and said he was detained Thursday in Moscow.

A U.S. Embassy official, asked for comment, said it was the first he had heard of Mr. Stombaugh's being ordered to leave the Soviet Union and therefore was unable to confirm the Tass report.

Reagan Stoutly Defends His Income Tax Reform As Good for All Citizens

By Gerald M. Boyd

New York Times Service BLOOMFIELD, New Jersey -President Ronald Reagan mounted a spirited response to critics of his tax plan in a speech here, saying the proposals did not favor any state and would not harm taxpayers in high-income-tax states like New

The president spoke to several thousand flag-waving enthusiasts on one of several trips around the country to press the case for his proposed tax revision. Bloomfield is about 15 miles (24 kilometers) from New York, where Mr. Reagan's proposal to end the federal deduction for state and local taxes has aroused vehement Governor Mario M. Cuomo of New York, a Democrat, is a key-opponent of the provision, which U.S. officials have called vital because the revenue it would provide would help offset cuts elsewhere. The president said the current income tax system was "ready for the ash heap of history" and that Congress faced the difficult task of replacing it with one that is "fair and easy to comprehend."

The plan would simplify individual tax rates, end the exemption for state and local taxes, increase al-lowances for individual exemptions and cut from 15 to three the number of tax rates.

The president's visit to New Jersey for a speech devoted exclusively to his tax plan marked a renewed effort by the White House to use

Mr. Reagan's popularity to muster support on the tax issue. Sloomfield, with a population of 50,000, was chosen to give the president a small-town backdrop that, seen on television, comes across as a typical U.S. community.

The president said, without naming names, that opponents were trying to block his tax revision program, which he contended would benefit the family, reduce the influence of special interests and allow people to get ahead. "Our tax reform is not without its foes," he said. "There are those

The agent was dismissed by the FBI last fall and he is accused of conspiracy to commit espionage with Mrs. Ogorodnikov and her husband, Nikolay, through the passing of secrets to the Soviet Union. Bangkok is an obvious place to buy Southeast Asian sculpture. Debris from jungle temples and occa-sional uncontrolled digs in Cambo-dia filter through the border. Parts of the northwest of Thailand have historically belonged to the Khmer world, and there, too, particularly in the Lopburi area, countless sites have been visited by agents cater-ing to dealers. The result is the continuing supply of headless tor-soes and heads without bodies.

But the Thais are skilled sculptors, which has led some to produce increasingly sophisticated reproductions of ancient sculpture. Could some have slipped into the

Looking at "A Khmer Gray Stone Female Figure, Baphnon style, 11th century," one could not help wondering at the awkwardness of the skirt, with its hesitant curves, and the almost realistic handling of the face that seemed unlike the idealized art of Buddhist Cambodia. Two of the most respected international dealers in the field, both insisting on anonymity, said that the piece could not be right. It sold for £15,950 with commission (about $20,000).

The following lot, "A Khmer Gray Sandstone Head of Avelokitesvara, Baphuon 11th century," was equally disturbing. The clumsy pyramidal headdress and the sketchy appearance of a row of seated Buddhas perched on the hairdo above the forehead make it an unlikely candidate to that glorious style and period of Khmer art. This went for £3,850.

Then there was "A Khmer Gray Sandstone Harihara Head, Angkor Wat style, circa 12th century," which looked like a caricature. The tall, exaggerated headdress hesi-tates between a truncated cone and

One of the masterpieces in the auction was an other buff sand-stone head of the Buddha with closed eyes and the ecstatic smile on its lips that is the hallmark of the greatest style at Bayon in the late 12th and early 13th centuries. It shows some wear but no restoration, and the nose, that strategic part of the face in any sculpture, which nearly always gets damaged, was intact. The masterpiece went down for a laughable £1,980, at half the low estimate of £4,000.

The greatest piece in the sale, by style. It belongs to the 9th century, of which specimens seldom turn up on the market. One dealer who probably sees more Southeast Asian sculpture than any of his colleagues said that he had not seen a comparable carving in the last five years. It was knocked down at only £20,900, Sotheby's estimate of £6,000 to £8,000 simply betraying the cataloger's lack of familiarity with Khmer art. The price is not exaggerated on that level of quality.

It is typical of this difficult field that an undestrable female figure dated by Sotheby's to the 12th century should have been bought a few minutes earlier by a Paris gallery for £19,800 - only £1,100 less than the 9th-century masterpiece,

Some of the finest acquisitions were even within the reach of buyers with limited resources. The earliest, and rarest, carving of all was a splendid gray stone Buddha head of the 6th or 7th century. It belongs to a phase of Khmer art that precedes the earliest period at Angkor. Stylization conventions of Indian art in the late Gupta period are still to be detected, such as the spiraling curls of the hair. The carving has lost much of its sharpness with the passage of time, but the head re-tains much of its former grandeur. It was knocked down at £1,210. and would be a fine acquisition for any university museum wishing to illustrate a style of the utmost rar-describing them as 13th-century Khmer is correct. The trouble is that no one knows anything about early stirrups in Cambodia. The Khmers were not a horse-riding race. The stirrups are clearly early. but how early is difficult to tell. The ornament is inconclusive, the rusty condition is no indication of age. They are splendid pieces for someone who likes art or is interested in the history of military equipment but not a good investment. Uncertainty about the nature of an object inevitably brings down the number of potential buyers to a handful.

That is actually the plight of Khmer art as a whole. Its market is narrow, despite its splendor. At the top end, there are less than five "serious buyers," to use a favorite expression of the trade. After John The greatest piece in the sale, by D. Félicien Rops: A Prurient Moralist

By Michael Gibson

D ARIS - Periods of social col-L'apse and upheaval breed dis-quieting fantasies about women: they suddenly appear perverse, threatening an instrument of death and the devil. In such times both puritanism and sexual license are exacerbated and the confrontation can become violent.

Puritanism during the decline of Rome and the Industrial Revolution, for example, is usually ascribed - erroneously - to the baneful influence of Christian doctrine upon an otherwise healthy and "natural" pagan culture. Yet as the classicist E. R. Dodds writes of of declining Rome, "Pagans and Christians vied with each other in heaping abuse on the body." And revolutions in general also have their prophets of sexual austerity, which Orwell grimly derided in his naginary "Anti-sex League."

The Belgian artist Felicien Rops (1833-1898) was much admired by Charles Bandelaire, and his work appears today as a perfect expression of this sort of mentality in the late 19th century. Rops was first of all a talented illustrator intelligently aware of the mood of the age as it writings of such French novelists and pamphleteers as Joris Karl Huysmans, Barbey d'Aurevilly and the preposterous Joséphin Pela-

But he did seem to share the distressing puritanical belief of the in this view, is an instrument of the day that sexual pleasure wears out and ages the body. It is no coincidence that the second half of the 19th century saw the efflorescence both of that spectacular form of hysteria that Jean Martin Charcot studied at the hospital of La Salpetrière and of the fashionable cult of Satan, which, in Huysmans's novel, "La-bas" appears in its literary variant.

To Bandelaire, Satan was a rebel hero on the Miltonian model, and this, among other things, was the affinity he saw between his views and Rops's. But Satan was also identified with sexuality in general: "Satanism," wrote Huysmans, "is the spiritualism of lechery." And Péladan declared: "Man is possessed of woman, and woman is possessed of the devil."

All this, and Rops's illustration of this theme appear almost comiwas expressed, for instance, in the cally remote from our own notions of art and life. Yet Roos's brilliantly executed work provides sharp delineation of a puritanical vision that is still active in the world to-

Woman devil because she attracts in an irresistible way, but she is also death in disguise, an abyss into which the newly vulnerable man, deprived of his culturally determined sexual identity, can lose himself.

Rops was by no means restricted to this theme, though it is no doub the most interesting part of his production. He was also a highly gifted political cartoonist, as shown by his drawings attacking the death penalty or on the repression of the Polish insurrection of 1863 ("L'ordre règne à Varsovie"). He also had an inclination for naughty or saucy drawings not far from what one sees in the milder erotic magazines today.

His teleat, in short, was manyfaceted, and not least among those talents was his ability to publicize himself. In France, he not only achieved notoriety, but became the best paid illustrator of his day.

not very comfortably, with currency exchange rates that float. It has been a dozen years full of surprises in the currency market, most of them disruptive and some very expensive. The float is the kind of arrangement that persists because nobody can quite think of an alternative that is likely to work. But perhaps that will now change, in a modest but useful way.

Floating means leaving a currency's exchange rate to the daily flow of buying and selling. Sometimes, as happened to the U.S. dollar in 1979-80, a currency's price in other countries' money falls well below its real value in terms of the things that it can actually buy at home. Sometimes, like the dollar today, it rises well above that value. That would never happen if foreign exchange only financed trade. But there are other forces in the currency market, great flows of investment and speculation, that constantly swing the rates, distorting trade and causing unemployment.

Until the early 1970s, governments could usually stabilize exchange rates by buying and selling on their own account. It was the enormous expansion of foreign currency trading that destroyed the fixed-rate system. On a typical business day the buying and selling of U.S. dollars now reaches about $200 billion.

That is roughly 20 times U.S. GNP per day. But if governments can no longer fix ex-change rates, they can still do a lot to damp down the swings and mitigate damage to their domestic economies. They can still intervene by buying and selling. It can be very helpful in the short run to break speculative surges.

For the longer run, there is only one thing that works - coordination of economic policy among the trading countries' governments. Most governments don't much care for the idea, because it limits freedom of action. The Reagan administration has until this spring resisted the idea vigorously, because it would mean international pressure on the United States to bring down its budget deficits.

But financial specialists representing most of the rich countries have been working on a set of proposals that constitute a nudge toward economic coordination. The process, working through the International Monetary Fund, is likely to move slowly toward adoption in the months ahead. Supporting it is very much in the interest of America in particular. The su-per-high dollar is not stable. If and when it begins to fall, America is going to need more help from governments abroad than it can expect under the present rules of the game. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Convenient Civil War

·Some face has been saved and backsides have been protected, but those are not good enough reasons for the House's change of heart about supporting the undeclared war against Nicaragua. After narrowly opposing all forms of aid to the "contra" rebels in April, the House now favors $27 million in "nonmilitary" help over the next nine months. Since the Senate has voted $38 million for a longer period, President Reagan has won a major political battle. The likely result is that the military battle will drag on, inconclusively.

If they mean what they say, that may be what Mr. Reagan and his newfound Democratic allies really want. Keeping up the "contra" attacks means that the president can damage and contain the Marxist regime without dignifying it in negotiation. And no Democrats get blamed for "losing" Nicaragua, whose leader had the effrontery to celebrate the April vote with a quick trip to Moscow. Mr. Reagan secured the switch of enough Democratic votes by denying that he seeks the military overthrow of the Sandinists. In perhaps his clearest statement of the war's objective, he said it would endanger U.S. interests in Central America "if we tolerate the consolidation of a surrogate state ... responsive to Cuba and the Soviet Union." That points to protracted harassment by the "contras." who obviously lack a knockout punch. Their jab-bing is meant to keep the Sandinists off balance and preoccupied at home with a deteriorating economy and souring morale.

So what's wrong with that? The first objec-tion ought to be human and moral: It is a policy bought with other people's blood. That "humanitarian" aid feeds a civil war in which the honor of the United States lies in the knapsack of hit-and-run terrorists.

A second objection is practical: As casualties rise, so do the risks that this war may develop its own momentum. The most likely "accident" — perhaps even favored by some of the sponsors of insurgency — would be crossborder raids by Nicaragua against "contra" sanctuaries in Honduras and Costa Rica. The Reagan administration contends that the "contra" war is insurance against direct U.S. intervention, but it could well have the opposite effect, provoking events that eventually impel the use of U.S. forces.

An undeclared, low-level war for nebulous aims may be politically convenient to the president and Congress, but it baffles public opinion and alarms major allies in Latin America, not one of which supports the war. Bleeding Nicaragua is unlikely to produce plausible terms for a political settlement. It promises mainly misery for the combatants, discord at bome and anti-Americanism abroad. The House's turnabout leaves the argument over Nicaragua stuck where it was, in a spongy bog.

No longer are Congress and President Reagan at odds on Nicaragua. The political system has worked over the issue and finally fetched up at an agreed policy. In its central feature, the policy permits, after a year's lapse, the resumption of direct aid to the Nicaraguan "contras." Seventy-three Democrats voted for it, reversing their party's previous veto.

There is always potential value in establishing a bipartisan approach to contentious foreign policy questions. The very process of establishing bipartisanship can be, if bloody, a positive influence on policy. Certainly it was that way as Congress and the president gradually came together on El Salvador in 1983-84. Congress added its emphasis on human rights. democratization, reform and political dialogue to Mr. Reagan's stress on the military struggle. The outcome was a balanced policy that has a reasonable chance of working over time.

H has yet to be shown that the same process of establishing bipartisanship can have a positive outcome in Nicaragua. There the two sides' contributions, rather than reinforcing each other, may tend to cancel each other out.

From the House Mr. Reagan won a resump-tion of aid to the "contras," but under conditions (logistical aid only, outside CIA and Pentagon channels) that make supporters uncertain whether the aid will produce the military pressures essential to success.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The conditions also include a statement from Mr. Reagan that he seeks not to overthrow the Sandinists but to coax them into negotiations and new elections. Whether this latest avowal of administration purpose describes its actual intent or represents any real change is very much up in the air. So is the question of whether this new assertion will limber up the Sandinists and make them readier for compromise. They can hear elated insurgents saying that the aid vote has restored a U.S. seal of unequivocal approval and given them the boost they need to press on.

The United States may end up with something of the worst of both worlds: certainly not enough conciliation and possibly not enough pressure to make the Sandinists alter course. The war could grind on, costing casualties, sidetracking diplomacy and increasing the chance of U.S. involvement as frustration mounts. But for now the debate is over. The question is whether the compromise can work. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

Spain and Portugal Plunge In

The Community is a hodgepodge of national egotism, regional prejudice and corporatism. After 30 years it is still unable to "dena-tionalize." Yet it has given Spain and Portugal the chance to emerge from isolation —and not just the recent isolation due to totalitarian regimes. Madrid and Lisbon have decided to join forces with those who believe in the possibility of a European federation. So there is cause for hope as well as for concern.

1910: The Man to Save the Buffalo PARIS - The British Government has just issued a statement that there is a plague of wild elephants in Uganda. They are roaming the country in devastating herds, eating up the settlers' gardens and even tearing the roofs off storehouses to devour the grain. Such a thing was never known there before. Neither did Theodore Roosevelt ever go shooting there before, and if this plague of elephants is the result of his trip it opens up a fine line of speculation. Elephants in Uganda are of little use to America, but why not apply the same cause for a much to be desired result in the United States? The buffalo is practically ex-

1935: A Financial Panie in Danzig

WARSAW - Despite, or perhaps because of, devaluation of the gulden by 42 percent some months ago, a financial panic has developed in the Free City of Danzig which may have wide-spread repercussions. Efforts of the Danzig Senate to calm the public have proved unavailing and the situation has become so critical that, following the visits of Colonel Joseph Beck, Polish Foreign Minister, Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, German Minister of Economics, flew there [on June 13]. Poland blames the freezing of Danzig credits in Germany for the situation and threatens in turn, if Polish credits are frozen by restrictions, to transfer its foreign commerce, on which Danzig depends, to its own port of Gdynia. The situation has been complicated by the Nazi activities in the Free State before and after the recent elections.

Do the Giants Know What They're Doing?

P ARIS — This is a period of uncertainty and groping in superpower relations, a cross-roads at which small steps can be decisive for future directions. There are some discomfiting parallels in Washington and Moscow. Neither capital seems to have faced up to the tough questions it must settle before the two can engage seriously in the negotiations they have launched. In Washington the battle continues over how to deal with the Russians. President Reagan wisely overrode administration hard-liners and rdered continued U.S. compliance with the SALT-2 treaty, although only for the time being. Moscow's initial reaction was another propaganda burp, accusing the United States of plot-ting to destroy the whole idea of arms control. So far the Soviets have responded almost hysterically to Mr. Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, making it the prime international politi-cal issue before anybody even knows if it is feasible. In both American and European opinion, the Kremlin has perversely recruited support

His economic To a surprising extent he has echoed the thesis that brought a degree of disgrace for the former chief of staff. Marshal Nikolai Ogarkov. It is that the technological muscle and productive capaci-ty of the Soviet civilian economy must be sharply upgraded, not only to raise living standards but also as the essential base for maintaining military strength. The marshal was dismissed last year.

He was one of the main Soviet spokesmen in the campaign opposing introduction of U.S. mis-siles in Europe. For nearly five years, that campaign was the central theme of Soviet diplomacy and it was a resounding failure. The Russians finally returned to the Geneva negotiating table anyway. the United States swears off. This is peculiar. The Russians know very well that there is no way to impose a verifiable ban on research. They admit that they are doing research that could have similar applications. Still they rerun the quit-or-we-won t-talk script, which served them so badly against the Euromissiles.

If they continue this line they risk recreating the kind of political box in which Washington feels obliged to plunge ahead whether the SDI looks sound or not, so as to deny a Soviet right of veto on U.S. arms decisions; and in which Moscow cannot back away from intransigence with-out appearing to have weakened. This kind of confrontational approach will block any chance of compromise. It threatens to collapse the whole effort to control the arms race by agreement.

That cannot be in the Soviet interest, any more than it is in the interest of the United States or the rest of the world. Very little is known about politics inside the Kremlin. Andrei Gromyko, who led Soviet diplomacy in its missile liasco, remains foreign minister, It is not clear whether he is responsible for repeating the style of that campaign now, or whether the advice comes primarily from Soviet military men.

They are technical, but of crucial importance if the ABM treaty and probably arms control in general are to be saved. The critical period, under U.S. "star wars" planning, will come between 1988 and 1993, that is, during the term of Mr. Reagan's successor. But by then, Mr. Rhinelander notes, the ABM treaty "probably could not be put back together again even if a later decision were made not to deploy SDL."

A Second Chance for Papandreou and Some Allies

ATHENS — Politicians do not always get a second chance, but Andreas Papandreou has sailed second term as prime minister with a clear lead of 5 percentage points over the conservative opposition. As in 1981, when his Panhellenic Socialist Movement put an end to almost half a century of right-wing rule in Greece, Mr. Papandreou faces four years in government armed with a strong mandate with which to try to set right the country's wrongs.

The governments of some partner countries in the European Community and NATO - West Germany and Britain, in particular — reacted less than graciously to Mr. Papandreou's victory. Yet the Socialists' 45.8 percent mandate is presumably a prod-uct of the democratic freedoms that the West was pleased to see Greece recapture after the painful experience of the colonels' dictatorship. So perhaps another way to look at the election result is that it gives

W ASHINGTON — Right after the House voted down the Boland amendment on Wednesday,

Speaker Tip O'Neill was in his private office doing what he often does — a favor for a friend. Still smarting from the clubbing he took on a move that would have ended CIA involvement with the "contras," he was making a tape for a fund-raiser for Mo Udall of Arizona.

Mr. O'Neill did not want to talk about what had just happened. He read from a statement hastily prepared by his staff, which pointed out that President Reagan had won only by repudiating minuary aid for the rebels, criticizing their conduct, agreeing to negotiate with the San-dinists and disavowing any inten-tion of overthrowing them.

The speaker's heart was not in it.

"I just can't explain it." he said. It was a galling personal loss. He had thrown all of his weight into the fight, casting aside his usual diffi-dence on foreign policy questions. On Nicaragna, he thought he knew, firsthand, more than the State De-partment or the White House. A boyhood friend had gone to Nica-ragua as a marine and been stabbed "for United Fruit." An aunt, a Maryknoll missionary had assured which as it happens, sent what Mr. Papandreou called a "warm" message of congratulations. Starting before the elections, he has been sending signals to Washington, using the press as one channel of communication, to indicate that he wants to improve Greek-U.S. relations.

At a press conference three days after his victory he aired a two-part proposition, suggesting it as a basis for improvement. America, he said, must recognize clearly the problems Greece faces today, and Greece must see to it that "pains are taken to explain that whatever positions we take have to do with this country and are in no sense intended to be offensive or inimical to the U.S."

warning was a powerful counter-weight against Nicaraguan Presi-dent Daniel Ortega's trip to Mos-cow, and against Democratic fears of looking "soft on communism." At his news conference before the session began, Mr. O'Neill clab-orated on President Reagan's martial fantasies, which he thinks are the roots of the policy.

"He is not going to be happy until he has our marines and our rangers down there," Mr. O'Neill said. "He can see himself leading a contingent down Broadway with paper flying out the windows, with a big smile on his face like a kind of grade B motion picture actor coming home the conquering hero."

He recalled Mr. Reagan telling him about the glorious day he pictured in Beirut. "with people waving handkerchiefs for the marines who had unified their country."

"It's unbelievable." Mr. O'Neill

mused, "but that's the way he talks,

But Mr. Reagan carried the day, 232-196. Fifty-eight Democrats de-serted Mr. O'Neill and his pal, Ed-ward P. Boland, the Massachusetts Democrat who chairs the House's Select Committee on Intelligence.

The most painful moment of a black day may have been the defec-

key. Many of Greece's allies in NATO or the EC switch off when the Greeks start talking about Turkey. In his first term Mr. Papandreou rendered a disservice to his own cause when he alienated the very Western goodwill he was trying to cultivate by adopting the role of the abrasive dissident on international issues of par-ticular sensitivity — the South Korean airliner and Poland, for instance, Yet it is a fact of Greek political life that the country faces problems in connection with Turkey. It is not only Mr. Papandreou's view. It is the national view, held across the board from the far left to the far right.

The crux of these problems is Cyprus. Turkey invaded the strategic island — whose population is 18 percent Turkish Cypriot and 80 percent Greek Cypriot — in 1974 after the Greek junta staged a coup against the government of Archbishop Makar-ios. Eleven years later Turkish troops sylvania Democrat, a huge, bhint, assertive Vietnam veteran. But Mr.

Murtha made one of the show speeches, an emotional tirade about the wimps in Congress who had lost

Vietnam by sending mixed signals.

Mr. O'Neill stood alone in the back of the chamber, his bulk draped over the brass railing, not wanting war and looking the picture of t ture of woe as Mr. Murtha spoke of people who had "fought in the mud, who had water up to the waist."

The Republicans were in rapture. Their leader, Robert H. Michel of Illinois, principal architect of the "humanitarian" aid bill, took a front-row seat for the affair. When

Mr. Murtha stopped shouting, he rushed forward to shake his hand.

Mr. O'Neill was scalded by the betrayal. "He is one of my dearest friends in the House," he said of Mr. Murtha. "I am upset. I am very, very upset with him."

Dolefully he said that the members voted against their constituents, who, poils show, want no part of Mr. Recorn's over a mith the of Mr. Reagan's quarrel with the Sandinists. And it wasn't Mr. Ortega's trip to Moscow. After all, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, who also went to see Mikhail Gorbachev and take money from him, was in-vited to address a joint session of Congress — "and at the request of the president," Mr. O'Neill noted.

"I don't know," he said. "I can't explain it. They're afraid. They're afraid of Ronald Reagan."

still occupy more than a third of Cyprus, holding Greek Cypriot prop-erties. That is problem number one. To protest against what it viewed as NATO inaction in the face of the invasion of Cyprus by a member state. Greece withdrew from the military wing of the alliance for almost six years. Its return in 1980 was carried out under the shadow of a Turkish bid for a larger slice of the opera-tional control pie in the Aegean, which would change the pre-1974 arrangements at the expense of Greece. The issue is still unresolved. That is problem number two. Disputes on continental shelf rights, territorial waters, airspace and Greece's right to militarize Aegean islands such as Lemnos — all of which sprang from the Pandora's box opened by the Cyprus crisis — constitute problem number three.

These are the "national problems" that Washington is called upon to understand. As the dominant superpower in the region the United States has the ability to help resolve them.

ish and American officials, the single most effective catalyst for resolving the Athens-Ankara disputes would be a Cyprus settlement. Washington gave behind-the-scenes support to a UN-sponsored meeting in January between Cypriot President Spyros Kyprianou and the Turkish Cypriot leader, Rauf Denktash. The meeting was a failure. Since then Mr. Denk-tash has proceeded to consolidate the self-styled state he proclaimed in the occupied north of Cyprus in 1983, through a referendum for a "consti-tution" and so-called "presidential elections" - moves that in the view of Western diplomats in Nicosia do not bode well for a settlement.

Roughly put, Mr. Denktash talks to Ankara, and Ankara talks to Washington. That seems an obvious place to start if the United States intends to respond to the first part of Mr. Papandreou's proposition.

As for the second part, Mr. Papan-dreou says he will make efforts to explain to the United States that there is nothing personal in controversial positions that Greece might choose to take on international, bilatchoose to take on international, bilateral or NATO issues. The Greek skepticism over the South Korean airliner incident, or opposition to sanctions against the Jaruzelski regime in Warsaw, might not have aroused quite such a storm if they had been expressed with more tact. Yet it is difficult to imagine Washington not being furious with Mr.

ington not being furious with Mr. Papandreon if comparable disagreements occur during his second term. When and if this happens, there is something that might be borne in mind: The United States is reaping today, in Greek anti-Americanism and a relative Greek tilt toward the Soviet Union, what it sowed by backing the Greek colonels in the late '60s and early '70s. This is one of the lessons of Mr. Papandreou's Greece.

U.S. Shows Symptoms Of 'Growth Recession'

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

EW YORK — Is the United States economy slouching toward recession? Since the first half of 1984, when the gross national product, adjusted for inflation, soared at an annual sets of 9.5. an annual rate of 8.6 percent, growth has slowed to a crawl. Real GNP rose at an annual rate of only 1.6 percent in the third quarter of 1984, perked up to 4.3 percent in the fourth quarter and then slowed down to seven-tenths of 1 percent in the first quarter of this year, yielding an average growth rate of just 2.2 percent for the last three quarters.

Thus, the economy appears to be in a "growth recession," which Stephen S. Roach, a vice president and senior economist of

down for the rest

Morgan Stanley & Co., defines as a period marked by real GNP growth of 2.5 percent or less for three consecutive quarters. Looking back over the last 30 years, he finds that the economy has gone through six growth recessions. In five of them, increasing idle industrial capacity and rising interest rates pushed the economy of this year. into outright recession. The sixth case, at the time called a "mini-recession," lasted from the second quarter of 1966 through the second quarter of 1967, with real growth averaging 2.4 percent. The five quarters of growth recession culminated in resumed expansion, with the help of bulging military spending during the Vietnam War.

Could the current episode prove to be another exception to the norm of real recessions following growth recessions? As Mr. Roach notes, one significant difference now is that interest rates have been coming down. Since the third quarter of 1984, the 90-day Treasury bill rate has declined by more than 15 percent, whereas in the six preceding growth recessions it rose by almost 15 percent.

Offsetting that decline in interest rates, however, are other negative forces. The capacity-utilization rate of manufacturing industry was at 82.8 percent at the start of the present growth recession and had fallen to 80.5 percent in April. By comparison, the capacity-utilization rate in manufacturing averaged 87 per cent at the outset of the last six growth recessions and, four quarters later, was down to an average of 85 percent of capacity. The effect of the current low rate of capacity use is already evident in lower business capital-spending plans. The latest Commerce Department survey, conducted in April and May, found that businesses plan to expand capital spending in 1985 by just 6.2 percent, rather than the 7.3-percent increase they reported in the January-March survey.

EFORE the current survey, industry was planning to reduce its capital outlays in the second half of this year from a seasonally adjusted peak annual rate of $388.9 billion in the second quarter to $384.3 billion in the second half of 1985, with the manufacturing industry trimming its capital outlays from a rate of $157 billion in the second quarter to $153. billion in the second half. But uncertainties over the president's proposal to overhaul the tax system, which would affect capital cost recovery and end the investment-tax credit, have apparently caused manufacturers to raise their capital-spending plans by 1.5 percent, to get in ahead of the changes.

Another factor pushing the economy down that was not present in earlier growth recessions is the overvalued dollar and the weakened foreign-trade position of the United States. Unless there is a significant correction in the value of the dollar, Mr. Roach warns, "a replay of cyclical history becomes a distinct possibility."

Even if the current growth recession does not turn into an outright one, most economists are marking their forecasts down dozen economists by Robert J. Eggert, editor of Blue Chip Indicators, finds that they are now forecasting real GNP growth U.K. to Sell

Japan's Growth Falters

Export Decline Blamed for Dip

By Keith Stafford

Reuters
TOKYO — Japan's economic growth in the first quarter of this year dropped to an annual rate of 0.4 percent compared with 9.9 percent in the last quarter of 1984, the Economic Planning Agency said

Economists said the sharp drop was mainly due to a decline in the growth rate for exports, caused by the downturn in the U.S. economy, Japan's major overseas market.

"It's pretty disappointing," said Nick Gregory, an analyst with House Govett (Far East) Ltd. "It's

worse than expected." The drop in economic activity left the final growth rate for the fiscal year ending March 31 at 5.7 percent after adjustments for inflation, the highest since 1972. Japan's economic growth is measured the same way the United States determines its gross national product, or GNP, the total output of a nation's goods and services.

Economists at the Nomura Re-search Institute predicted that the growth rate in the 1985 fiscal year would be around 4.4 percent.

Lower export growth, an anemic improvement in domestic consumer spending and restrictions on government spending were to blame, they said. The poor economic performance was likely to increase pressure on Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasome to abandon his tight state spending policy, analysts said. Industrialists argue that the government should spend more on public works projects, such as housing and roads. Japan cannot overcome its problems by trying to export more at a time when it is under pressure to reduce a massive trade imbalance, The Japanese trade surplus this year is expected to reach $40 billion and there have been widespread demands, especially in the United States, for protectionist legislation to cut down on Japanese imports.

Kazuo Kida, chief economist at Samitomo hank, said the disappointing first-quarter growth figure the bid would have to be raised to sat least $30 million. He and other was due primarily to a slowdown in at least £380 million. He and other Reflecting hopes for a higher bid.

Northrop's Fighter Climbing Fast

Air Guard Lobby Boosts Fortunes of Tigershark

By Wayne Biddle
New York Times Same WASHINGTON — Buried among 200 pages of the 1986 military programs bill that the House of Representances will debate this month is a congressional instruction that is rare in the annals of Air Force procurement. It calls for direct competition between two warplanes — General Dynamics Corp.'s F-16 Falcon, of which the Air Force has already acquired more than 1,300, and Northrop Corp.'s F-20 Tigershark, a plane that nobody has bought so far.

The directive does not guarantee that Northrop will sell a single F-20 to the Pentagon. And it may be, as some in Washington say, that the plane is being used simply to beat down the price of the F-

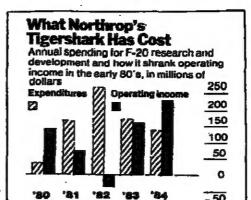

But the F-20's prospects have nonetheless sud-denly blossomed. In addition to the military-reform movement in Congress, the plane has been given an assist from budget constraints on the Air Force, a drive by the Air National Guard to win new aircraft instead of traditional Air Force hand-me-downs and Northrop's own lobbying and mar-

And there may also be an export market. National security officials disclosed on Wednesday that Jordan appeared to be moving toward accepting Washington's preconditions of negotiations with Israel for purchase of the F-20.

Indeed, the Tigershark was designed at the behest of the Carter administration as a less-expenhest of the Carter administration as a less-expen-sive fighter for the export market. The idea was to make planes available to friendly countries, but not such high-performance aircraft as might tip the balance of forces in any region.

However, under the Reagan administration, for-eign governments have had liberal access to the most sophisticated American weapons technology, leaving the F-20 on the shelf. As a result, Northrop, which has invested $800 nillion in the F-20, has built only three prototypes, two of which have crashed.

The House Armed Services Committee's unusual requirement on competition, which the Senate is likely to accept, is part of the extraordinary turn of fortune for the F-20.

The story of the F-20's climb out of five years of commercial doldrums into the House legislation, and into the Air Force's budget plan for 1987 and beyond, reflects much more than the new fashion for competition in Pentagon procurement.

"Northrop worked like a demon for four or five years and got absolutely nowhere," said an aide at the Senate defense appropriations subcommittee. Then suddenly, this spring, the company seemed to According to Representative James A. Courter,

Economy Entering A Period Of Change

By Olfar Tohamy

CAIRO — The Egyptian economy is passing through a transitional period during which its structure is being reshaped and its relations with the rest of the world are being redefined as economists hope for a new stage of sustained and balanced growth.

This new phase, starting with the beginning of the fiscal year in July, was forecast by the 1982-1987 social and economic development plan, laying the groundwork for wide-ranging changes. The desired plan and the increasingly influen-tial role exercised by the Ministry of Planning characterize a new style of managing the economy brought in by President Hosni Mu-

Although five-year development plans are not new to Egypt, having been introduced more than two decades ago, the current plan is dis-tinguished by its direct impact, enhanced by close monitoring and regular follow-up.

The minister of planning, Kamal el-Ganzouri, asserted his satisfaction with the economy's performance in line with the plan, which he described as "corrective" for trends associated with rapid expansion. The first year of the plan coincided with the start of downward pressure on the economy brought about by a fall in government revenues. The growth rate of gross domestic product dropped from a record 9 percent before 1981 to 7.6 percent last year and an expected 7.4 percent this year. Mr. Ganzouri believes that the first challenge to the realization of the plan's goals is the rate of population growth, which remains one of the highest in the world at 2.7 percent annually. Another is the appetite for consumption, which he regards as incompatible with pre-sent economic conditions. The third challenge is that certain sectors of the economy have proven more capable of meeting their ob-toward import substitution and export promotion. The last few years have witnessed movement in the direction of import substitution, with increases in agricultural pro-duction permitting Egypt to sub-stantially reduce imports of eggs, beans, sugar and other items. Rising industrial production has put an end to imports of fertilizer and has cut cement imports of fertilizer and has cut cement imports in half, also sharply reducing purchases abroad of consumer products such as cigarettes and electrical appli-ances. These results, have been achieved with the private sector contributing a quarter of new investments, exceeding its targeted

Mubarak Scores Points For Foreign Policy, but Economic Woes Remain

CAIRO — Egypt has edged clos-er to center stage in the Arab world this year, but it has still managed to improve its cool relations with Isra-

As President Hosni Mubarak approaches his fourth anniversary in power since he took over after the assassination of Anwar Sadat on Oct. 6, 1981, he has, in the words of one Western diplomat, "become his own man; he is no longer seen as Sadat's vice president,"

While the pressing domestic problems of modern Egypt show no signs of disappearing, President Mubarak's successes in foreign affairs have increased his stature as

For the most part, the impetus for improvement came from out-side — when Jordan unilaterally decided to restore ties after a five-year break last September and with the change of government in

But, in the view of analysts in Cairo, Egypt has been careful to take full advantage of the opportunities offered. It has played an important backstage role in promot-ing new Jordanian peace efforts and dampened earlier criticism of Israeli policies in south Lebanon as Israel began to withdraw from the

On the domestic front, parlia-mentary elections in May of last year also helped to improve Mr. Mubarak's standing they said.

While all the opposition parties accused the government of rigging the elections, analysts agreed that they were the freest ever seen in modern Egypt. this; it has put his mark on Egyptian policies," one diplomat said.

Otherwise, Egypt's main problem—its rapidly increasing population—remains insoluble and could bring severe difficulties in the long term.

The current population is esti-mated at 48 million and is growing by 2.7 percent annually, or 1 milion new citizens every 10 months. Half the population is under 20 and only 10 percent of the land, mainly along the Nile Valley, is considered dress the issue as Mr. Mubarak warned of "terrible famine, unemployment and terrorism" if population growth were not checked.

On the economic front, experts predict a balance of payments defi-cit in the current financial year. The balance was in surplus throughout the second half of the 1970s and into the 1980s.

Western economists say that many of the elements that enabled Egypt to stay in the black were only temporary and that nothing is on the horizon to take their place.

They include remittances from Egyptian workers abroad, allowed to travel freely for the first time after the 1973 Middle East war, and income from the Sinai oil fields that Israel returned to Egypt. Both these sources of income appear to have peaked, the economists said.

One policy viewed as playing a large role in Egypt's problems is the

This has, nevertheless, created a lack of import controls under infi liberalization sponsored by Mr. Sadat to promote a free-market economy. "The open door has become like a saloon door, swinging back and forth," one economist said.

Another is the government's per-sistence in subsidizing food, energy and clothing. These measures, de-signed to help the poor, also benefit the wealthy since reduced prices are available to all. The international Monetary Fund has repeatedly asked Egypt to scrap the subsi-

But Mr. Mubarak wins high praise from Western economists for the interest he has taken in the economy since he took power, "He has made it a priority, whereas Sa-

Mr. Mubarak appears to have maintained control over the internal situation while taking care not to exacerbate tensions.

The 'Blooming Desert' Still in Dream Phase

By Anne Charnock

CAIRO — Hard work has brought few rewards for farmers trying to make the desert bloom in South Tahrir. These pioneers, stirred by the national dream of colonizing Egypt's vast and lands, are struggling to make a profit from their small 10 or 20-acre (4-or-8-hectare) plots, bought from the old state farms set up in Gamal Abdel Nasser's day.

They receive little guidance on what crop to grow or how to irrigate this unfamiliar territory. And as a result of daily electricity failures, water cannot be pumped from the main canals for hours at a time. So farmers must watch their crops die in the fields.

Desert reclamation is a top-priority government policy because of the country's rapid population growth and the consequent loss of prime agricultural land to urban sprawl along the Nile Valley and Delta. At first glance, desert farm.

They have realized that there is nothing active that they can do. They are just rushing about telling people that the Jordanian-PLO accord is important."

Egyptian officials have since be come extremely cautious in their discussion of King Hussein's peace moves. But observers say that Egypt has put many of its hopes for a full reintegration into the Arab fold — and presumably for a re-newed leadership role—in the Jordanian-PLO stance.

Citrus varieties are being compared and eucalyptus trees are being planted for wind-breaks and fuelwood.

"We're learning just what we can and can't do in the desert," Mr. Bower said. He stressed that "given half a chance, small farmers could succeed here." The government is trying to speed up desert reclamation. Earlier this year, at the instigation of the agriculture minister, Youssef Waly, land prices were slashed. The main proviso is that the land must be Cultivated within three years.

At the same time it is encouraging desert reclamation, the government is attempting to boost production from "old lands," namely, the ribbon of agricultural land on the banks of the Nile and in the Delta. According to unofficial estimates by foreign agriculturalists, productivity in the old lands could e increased by up to 50 percent if sert reclamation projects for invest-

However, following machinery demonstrations on several of their farms, they are enthusiastically adopting mechanization not simply for tilling - which is already the norm in Feypt — but for planting, weeding, ditching, spraying, threshing and so on. Moreover, after three years of the project's operation, they are paying unsubsidized rates for hiring project equipment. Mechanization is being given a national push in the old lands. The Ministry of Agriculture plans to set up 150 self-supporting mechaniza-tion centers that will introduce farmers to new technologies and hire out machinery. As such, the Naway project will provide useful lessons since this is the only community level project for mechaniza-tion in Egypt. Twenty-seven cen-ters have been set up so far at the main center at Sakha, in Kafr el-Sheik, and comparative field trials on foreign equipment are under way to find the best models for different crops and field sizes. Tractors and chisel ploughs are already used by three-quarters of Egyptian farmers and, according to Mr. Waly, "very soon our tradi-tional wooden ploughs will only be used for decoration in restaurants."

If rationing is introduced, farmers would be affected the worst since agriculture takes nearly 90 percent of supplies.

Water-conservation projects are being pushed ahead. Biggest remrns are expected from rensing drainage water from agricultural land. For example, El Salam Canal is being built from the Damietta branch of the Nile to the Suez Canal, and a half of its water will come from two main drains. This drainage flow is mixed with fresh water so that salinity levels are kept

So far the canal is over 80 kilometers (49.5 miles) long and should reach the Suez Canal in 1987. Future plans include taking FI Salaam waters under the Suez Canal by syphon for proposed irrigation pro-jects in Sinai — proposals of dubious economic merit, according to outside agriculturalists.

In addition, treated sewage from Cairo will be used for irrigation when the Cairo wastewater project tribution in the country's irrigation network would go a long way toward improving water-use and farm efficiency. Of critical importance, therefore, is the U.S. Agency for International Development's fi-Water is central to agricultural nancing the telemetry project to policy, particularly now that the

Nevertheless, Mr. Waly is adamant that increasing farm produc-tion to meet demands of a fastgrowing population will depend on the individual efforts of Egypt's 3.5 million farmers. It is significant that since 1980, Egypt's agricultur-al research stations have been directed into demonstration and extension work rather than pure

Another rate set at 1.33 pounds to the dollar is basically the previous rate to which a premium was added to encourage transfers through the banking system. The highest rate is that offered by unauthorized dealers to attract expatriate remittances for financing imports through free foreigncurrency accounts. Representing two-thirds of the foreign-exchange supply, this rate has lately shot up to 1.50 pounds to the dollar.

The partially floating rate was first introduced last January as part of a package involving the rationalization of imports through controlling the issuance of letters of credit, forbidding the use of free bank accounts to fund imports, in order to curb black market activities, and making the down payments and eventual repayments for letters of credit in Egyptian pounds in an effort to channel foreign-exchange operations through the banking

But the new governor of the cen-tral bank, Ali Negm, said that the hanking sector should be encouraged to play that role and that it represented a more viable channel for transfers. Other steps seem to indicate movement toward the selective subsidization of end products rather than production inputs, but the change seems to be too slow to convince international aid donors, headed by the International Monetary Fund.

The new draft budget presented to parliament includes for the first time a freeze on direct subsidies, amounting to about 2 billion Egyptian pounds ($3 billion). The figure excludes indirect subsidies on energy, trimmed by the recent price

'U.S. Aid Now Focused on Development

CAIRO — Ten years after it started as an American contribu-tion to help repay damage incurred sional funding fation to help repay damage incurred over 30 years of war with Israel, U.S. aid for Egypt has grown into a Downtum wide-ranging program with an in-creasingly direct and taugible impact on Egypt's future economic development

The program, which has so far allocated more than $10 billion in loans and grants to Egypt, has re-cently reached a turning point. The Egyptian economy's slower rate of growth and the difficulty of adjust-ting to the change are bringing about a new attitude toward economic development, which seems to be in line with the U.S. Agency for International Development revised approach toward its worldwide activities, and specifically its role in Egypt.

An outcome of the agency's assessment of its performance over several years was a decision to regularly monitor and review the strategy of specific programs implemented in different countries. It was also decided that the scope of authority of the head of the mission in Egypt, which is the largest in the social, would be widened. This was complet with the appointment to-Cairo last November of Frank Kimball, who was the aid agency's of the change is that starting from the 1985 fiscal year, the total amount of assistance provided for Egypt has reached $1.04 billion, including $815 million in project financing and $225 million under the Food for Peace program, pro-vided in kind. Another important turnaround this year is that the funding component of the program has for the first time become a grant, meeting a long-standing Egyptian request for parity with Israel, which has been receiving lavish U.S aid grants for several

Moreover, the U.S. Congress recently approved a $500-million cash transfer to Egypt for the fiscal cash starting next October. Israel has been receiving its grant in the form of a cash transfer.

"There is an opportunity...You cannot project us being here forev-er. Mr. Kimball said, pointing out that Egypt is getting $1 out of every $1,000 in the U.S budget. "The real challenge is to get a return on that," he said. The minister of planning and international cooperation, Kamal el-Ganzouri, agreed. He said that since he has become the top Egyptian official directly supervis-ing the program, 'we have begun to use the funds more rationally."

Mr. Ganzouri believes that pro-jects financed by the aid agency should become integrated into should become integrated into Egypt's five-year development plan. He complained that the program represented U.S interests by 70 percent and Egyptian interests by only 30 percent. "I am trying to have it represent both national interests." terests," he said.

U.S assistance for Egypt began shortly after the resumption of dip-lomatic relations between the two countries coincided with U.S-sponsored efforts to lay the groundwork for peace between Egypt and Israel and took a major boost after the conclusion of the Camp David agreements in 1978.

Following the first agreement, an allocation of $250 million was made by the United States to help with a few projects in the Suez Canal area, where the three main wities were almost razed to the ground during Egypt's last war with Israel in 1973. Also included in this package was a contribution to the removal of war debis that blocked the canal during the war and prevented navigation. Since then, it has broadened its scope and increased the number of projects it got involved in, bringing the total number of projects totally or partly financed by the aid agency this year to more than 80.

These cover infrastructure, telecommunications, housing, health, dustry, agriculture and finance and include research and training as well as the supply of equipment.

Egyptian and U.S officials have expressed their relief that an increasingly large part of frozen specific projects but not spent because of implementation problems or red tape, are being released. They recognize the importance of enhancing coordination and follow-up on policy matters. "To have the biggest impact, we

They were concen-trated in the form of short-term financing facilities for importers of U.S-manufactured goods, occasionally stumbling into problem that have prevented the expenditure of some of these funds. A group of entrepreneurs has been trying through a committee formed by the U.S-Egypt Chamber of Commerce to increase the amount of the facilities, as well as expand the private sector's input into the implementation of the agency's

U.S. Auto Sales Gained Sharply For Early June

New York Times Service DETROIT - Sales of new automobiles showed surprising strength in early June, de-spite a lack of manufacturers' incentive prospite a lack of manufacturers incentive programs and a gradual softening in consumer confidence. Domestic car makers said sales rose 15.5 percent in the first 10 days of the month. Sales of light trucks increased sharply, by 35.2 percent, from the same time last year. There were eight selling days in the period this year and last.

The manufacturers sold a total of 216.555.

The manufacturers sold a total of 216,565 new cars in the period at a daily rate of 27,071. It was the highest daily rate for the first 10 days of June since 1978, when cars sold at a rate of 31,475 a day.

The Commerce Department said the seasonally adjusted annual selling rate was 7.9 million units. However, a number of auto analysts.

The Commerce Department sait the seasonally adjusted annual selling rate was 7.9 million units. However, a number of auto analysts, manufacturers and officials in other government departments, who use their own adjustment factors, said that was artificially low and should be closer to 8.6 million.

According to the Commerce Department, the seasonally adjusted annual selling rate for June 1-10, 1984, was 7.8 million.

"These were exciting numbers," said Ann C. Knight, who follows the industry for Paine Webber. "It's very difficult to measure how much excessive demand incentive programs have created, but it doesn't look like they have borrowed a whole lot from the future. In my heart of hearts, I was expecting sales to flop—but they sure didn't flop."

Most of the companies were offering financing below market rates through April, but most programs expired at the end of May.

American Motors Corp., however, whose share of the domestic market has dwindled as sales of subcompacts slowed in the past year, announced Thursday a cash-rebate program sales of subcompacts slowed in the past year, announced Thursday a cash-rebate program that will go through the end of July. Customers can receive up to $595. The company said the idea was to pay for 10,000 miles of gasoline, based on fuel ratings by the Environmental Protection Agency, but the company will give the buyer a check at the time of purchase.

General Motors Corp. said car sales rose 16.6 percent, from the same time last year, on deliveries of 129,594 units. Light truck sales soared 48.2 percent, to 40,815.

Sales of new cars by Ford were up 14.4 percent, with 52,846 deliveries by dealers. Light-truck sales jumped 24.6 percent, to 30,899.

Chrysler Corp. reported the largest increase in car sales among the domestics: Its 28,184 sales were 20.7 percent higher than last year.

Chrysler Corp. reported the largest increas

Truck sales were also strong, up 43 percent, to 15,215 units.

American Motors estimated that car sales fell 27.4 percent in the period, to 2,360 units, and Jeep sales dipped 12.5 percent, to 3,150.

The American Honda Motor Co. said sales fell 34.1 percent, to 1,845 units. Honda is expanding its Ohio production plant and the construction delayed delivery struction delayed delivery.

Volkswagen of America said sales of its domestically produced cars rose 18.7 percent, to 986 vehicles. Nissan Motor Manufacturing Corp., which began assembling cars in the United States a few months ago, does not report sales on a 10-day basis. But industry analysis estimated that company's car sales at 750 units and domestically produced truck sales at 4,000 in the period.

Business Failures Show Monthly Increase in Japan

TOKYO — Japanese corporate bankrupteies rose to 1,753 in May from 1,611 in April, but were down from 1,965 in May, 1984, the Tokyo Commerce & Industry Research Co. said Friday.

Debts in May rose to 283.62 bil-lion yen ($1.13 billion) from 281.84 billion yen in April and 269.53 billion a year earlier. The rise in bankruptcies is due to slower U.S. economic growth, which is likely to lead to fewer exports, and a slowdown in domestic consumption and housing investment on which medium and small enterprises depend, it said. The company's figures are used by the Bank of Japan for its bank-

Lehman Jr., the navy secretary, in getting General Dynamics to reduce the price of F-16's used in Navy war games simply by considering the F-20 as a competing candidate.

"To meet the Air Force's goal of 40 tactical fighter wings by 1991, we cannot afford to fill it with F-16s," Mr. Courter said, echoing the committee's conclusion that "budgetary constraints dictate adjust-ments in the long-range procure-

In its recommendations to the House on the fiscal year 1986 military budget, the committee direct-ed the Air Force to consider "changing the force mix," meaning perhaps fewer F-16s and some F-20s, at lower prices.

The Guard's stepped-up lobby-ing, Mr. Courter explained, was based on the feeling that "they shouldn't get hand-me-down's from the active Air Force, especial-by with plans for the future calling but said: "Even in declining markets, there are growth sectors. Guinness officials said they could use Bell's small glass-containers manufacturing unit. But they suggested that they might sell Bell's four botels in Scotland and London, Analysts estimated that the hotels would letch £50 million to £80 million.

An analyst at Grieveson, Grant & Co. said the bid was "rather puzzling" because both the beer and whisky markets have "gone ex-

But Colin Humphreys of Scrimgeour Vickers & Co. said Guinness's marketing arguments were "very plausible." He added that Bell, as one of the most profitable Scotch distillers, would bolster Guinness financially by providing "a big slug of U.K. earnings."

But analysts said the offer could well be subject to a review by the government. The Scots are highly sensitive about takeover raids by outsiders, especially in such a tradi-tional Scottish business as whisky.

Normally, the Guard obtains used warplanes from the Air Force or a few new ones through annual congressional appropriations.

"The National Guard pushed hard for the F-20," a House aide said. "They felt they could buy and operate the F-20 for less than they could continue operating their old "Far and away, the Air National" Guard was a critical element" in setting up the competition, a Sen-ate staff member agreed.

Meanwhile, the Air Force was also turning toward the F-20, as evidenced by speeches and con-gressional testimony by the air force secretary, Verne Orr.

Mr. Lehman's success in reducing the price the Navy paid for the F-16 was said to be one factor, "Orr felt burned by Lehman's 'aggressor' competition," the House staff member said. When the Navy Secretary got General Dynamics to sell him F-16's for $11 million, the Air Force was still buying comparable versions for $16 million,

Although there is little doubt that the Air National Guard would like to own F-20s based on the plane's technical merits, sources in Congress say the Air Force sees it drive down the cost of the F-16.

There is also, these sources say, a great deal of uneasiness in the Air Force about continuing a monogamous relationship with General

"What generates this is not Northrop pulling strings, but uneasi-ness with General Dynamics," said a House source.

The intuitions in Denis Johnson's "Fiskadoro" are luminous and suggestive. Thinking into the remnants of what may lie beyond a nuclear holocaust, the novel replants a marooned bit of humanity as if it were a cutting, and recounts the old traits and the new ones that sprout from it.

The mainland of the United States has been destroyed, and perhaps other parts of the world as well. We do not know, exactly, because "Fiskadoro" keeps us in the hauntingly confined circle of its characters own knowledge. They are a straggler community in the Florida Keys, which survives on the edge of the contaminated regions to the north.

It is a quarantined zone, enforced by the undestroyed societies south of it - notably Cuba, which holds the region's power. The quarantine is temporal as well as geographic. It has been in force since the bombs fell, 60 or 70 years earlier, and it will end before very much longer.

The inhabitants of Twicetown — it is Key West and named after the two dud nuclear bombs that fell there and that serve as a kind of shrine - wait in vague apprehension. Their transitional society is about to be replaced; they have no idea how. From the brief words of a narrator at the beginning, we gather that when Cuba, itself transformed, moves in, it will impose what has become an extensive plantation economy and a theocratic regime based on the Koran. Johnson's novel, beautifully written, does not deal with this future except as a barely suggested shadow. Its focus is on the transitional settlement of fishermen and traders that lives among artifacts of the past, scraps of memories and the uncertain shape of what is to come.

They are a mixture of blacks, whites and Latinos, and they speak an unstable patois with a strong infusion of Spanish. They live by fishing, a kind of scrappy gardening and a few rudimentary crafts bartered with the traders who scavenge the destroyed settlements to the north for bits and pieces of what remains of America's consumer output. They have old records and tapes, amplifying equipment and carefully mended strobe lights for cor munal celebration. Their huts are furnished with old church pews, car seats, bits of chrome.

Deformed mutants - Los Desechados (the Destitute), they are called - wander through. In the swamps, there is a community of drug-taking primitives whose totem is a two-headed snake - another mutation - and who mutilate their genitals to imitate it.

The three principal characters represent three stages of time. The one at mid-point is Anthony Cheung, a middle-aged clarinetist and vegetable gardener. He does not remember the pre-holocaust civilization but is dedicated to trying to decipher and hold on to bits of it. His parents had their children memorize the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence before burning their copies to keep warm; and in moments of distress, he recites passages from them. Cheung lives with his grandmother, a woman in her 90s who was a Vietnamese refugee. She alone remembers the prewar world, which for her was a series of flights. In a succession of brilliantly written passages, she recalls bits of her childhood and adolescence. But she can no longer speak, and so the testimony about pre-war civilization that Cheung so covets - the irony is scaring - is denied to him.

Cheung is also the mentor of Fiskadoro, a fisherman's son to whom he tries to teach the clarinet. Fiskadoro, whose name is a corruption of an old Spanish word for harpoonist, is a misfit among the fishermen and an outsider at the bonfire-lighted beach parties held by his companions. He wanders off across the dunes and is captured by the swamp people. They give him drugs and mutilate him.

He returns, finally, and as he convalesces, he gradually relearns what he has forgotten. But it is knowledge, not memory. Cheung teaches him the clarinet once more, and this time he plays it marvelously well. He has "forgotten how not to play," and it is in this state, unmarked by history, that he becomes a sign of the featureless future, just as Cheung's grandmother is a sign of the past.

Weaver Returns to the Orioles

Popular Manager Agrees to Lead Team Through Season

BALTIMORE — Earl Weaver returned as manager of the Baltimore Orioles on Friday, a day after the American League club dismissed Joe Altobelli." Weaver agreed to handle the chib through the remain-der of the season, after which the situation will be

Weaver said at a news conference Friday that he did not decide until talking Thursday with team officials to leave retirement and rejoin the baseball club. He said he had been talking with the team since the start of the season about returning as a consultant, but that a deal could not be worked out.

Weaver said that he had received two offers to manage other ballclubs since the spring, and numer-ous others prior to that but that he decided to return to Baltimore because of his familiarity with the team and the city. He was to take over the team Friday night, when the Orioles were scheduled to play the Milwan-

Thursday, Hank Peters, the Orioles' general manager, said: "We are sorry about relieving Joe Altobeli. It was a difficult decision, but we did not like the direction in which the club seems to be headed and decided that a change was necessary."

The team owner, Edward Bennet Williams said of Weaver: "I think he came back out of loyalty to this organization." He described his dismissal of Altobelli as a "painful experience"

"We did not have the kind of leadership you expect from a manager," Williams said. "I say that reluctantly because I like Joe so much. But I did not think we had the kind of leadership on the field that we're used to in the Oriole organization. Joe didn't have the things that go into making a first-class, top manager. FIRE A WHILE

NEW YORK - Until now, Earl Weaver had resisted for more than two seasons the temptation to sneak a smoke in the discout runway between innings. As recently as late April, when George Stein brenner was losing patience while the Yankees were losing games with Yogi Berra as manager, the principal owner sounded out Veaver before anointing Billy Martin for the fourth time. Weaver wisely knew better than to be inter-

"I don't know if Billy knows he was the second choice," a source familiar with the Yankees' managerial move said at the time. "But he

Then as before, Weaver contended that he had no desire to be a manager again. Even when the ABC network did not re-sign him after two seasons as a television analyst, he had talked about how happy he was as an ex-manager who played golf, played the horses and played with his tomato plants.

But sooner or later Weaver had to be Weaver again; sooner or later Weaver had to manage again.

And as the Orioles played the Milwaukee Brewers in Baltimore

Friday night, Weaver returned to the same dugout he had hopped out of on Sept. 30, 1982, after the Orioles had lost the American League East title to the Brewers in the final game of the 1982 season. Even in the disappointment of that defeat, a spontaneous standing ovation from the Oriole followers had prompted Weaver to appear for an encore, to wave his cap in appreciation, even to use his arms and legs to form an "O-r-i-o-le-s" cheer. "Well," he said a few minutes later

> But even on that day, Weaver seemed to be the only person who thought his career as a certified genius was over. That day he had walked into the sunset at age 52— too young to play golf and play the horses for the rest of his life, cer-tainly too young to play with his tomato plants for the rest of his life. Maybe a corporate or corpulent man could do that at 52, but not Having dropped eight games be-hind the Toronto Blue Jays and into fourth place in the American League East, the Orioles needed favor. My words him. Just as he needed baseball again. But now he needs to be as "mean" a manager, to use his word, as he once was. The day the 1982 season ended, he talked about how important it was for a manager to possess that "mean" manner.

"I don't think I can be mean enough any more," he said then. "I was mean enough this year because I knew this was it. But I don't think that I could be mean enough next year. That's why I'm stopping." Next year for Weaver is now this

Chen, Making a Double Eagle, Claims Lead in U.S. Open Golf

To do it, he holed a 3-wood from the fairway, 255 yards out, on his second shot Thursday on the par-5 second hole at Oakland Hills Country Club.

Two hours later, the 26-year-old Chen, who is playing in his first Open, birdied the 17th and 18th holes to complete a round of fiveunder-par 65 that gave him the first-round lead by a shot over Fred Couples in the 85th Open.

Varied weather helped prolong the opening round; the first player completed the round at 8:50 P.M. over this normally strong 6,996yard course. Temperatures ranged from 49 to 71 degrees (9 to 22 degrees centigrade), and a strong north wind held steady. There were three short rainstorms, one of which produced lightning that halted play for 14 minutes when Chen was on the 16th tee. The first rain

This par-5 is flat and unlike many of the other 17 holes that have approaches to highly raised greens. The No.2 hole, a slight dogleg left, played downwind to the pin that was set on the right side away from a bowl-like center area of the green.

The green lies behind a group of four small bunkers that Chen had the 15 players at 71. That was the to carry over to land on the putting

A double eagle is considerably more difficult than a hole in one. There have been 16 holes in one in an Open since Zell Eaton made an ace in the 1936 Open at Baltusrol. Before that, U.S. Golf Association records are incomplete on aces.

Preseason NIT Basketball Shapes Up

NEW YORK (NYT) - The field for the first preseason National Invitation Tournament has been announced, ending months of specula-tion and putting into motion what could develop into one of the strongest U.S. preseason college basketball tournaments.

St. John's, which won 31 games last season en toute to the Final Four, heads the field of 16 that will compete in four regions. Besides St. John's, 11 of the teams competing were in the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament last spring: Duke, Kansas, Dayton, Alabama-Birmingham, Navy, Aubum, Tulsa, Washington, Texas-El Paso, Pepperdine and Miami of Ohio. The other participants will be West Virginia, Louisville, Texas A&M.

and Lamar. The two winners in each regional will meet Nov. 24. The four semifinalists will advance to a doubleheader in Madison Square Garden on Nov. 29. The championship game will be played Dec. 1. 3 Teams Reported Keen on Wiggins

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Three baseball teams, including the Baltimore Scioles, are interested in acquiring Alan Wiggins, the San Diego Padres Second baseman, who has received medical clearance to play again after undergoing drug rehabilitation, according to Padres' spokesmen.

The Padres, who have publicly stated that Wiggins will never again play for San Diego, are weighing the offers, Beck said. Wiggins, 27, underwent a monthlong drug treatment program that ended May 26. It was the second time in three years that Wiggins had undergone drug treatment.

In 1982, Wiggins was arrested for cocaine possession, underwent drug rehabilitation and was suspended from baseball for 30 days. At the time of the 1982 incident, Wiggins was warned by the Padres' president, Ballard Smith, that he would be dropped from the team if he became involved with drugs again.

Albeck Appears Destined for Bulls

CHICAGO (AP) - Stan Albeck, the coach of the New Jersey Nets, has ended several days of speculation by saying that he has "agreed in principle" to become the new head coach of the Chicago Buils of the National Basketball Association, according to a published report.

Jerry Krause, the Buils' vice president for operations and a long-time afriend of Albeck, told the New York Times in Friday's editions that there are some details to work out" before the move becomes official But he said: "He wants to come here and we want him. So I would say the chances are very, very good." According to the Times, neither Albeck nor Kranse would reveal the details of the contract, but it was believed to be for three years and worth

If you don't tell us before we get our next phone bill I'm going to print your home number in the paper. Respectfully yours, An Admirer.

John Huston, Jack Nicholson Team Up for 'Prizzi's Honor'

New York Times Service

N EW YORK — Early last year John Huston discovered a copy of Richard Condon's novel
"Prizzi's Honor" in his office, where it had been sitting since its publication in 1982. Fortunately, the book jacket mentioned that Condon lived in Dallas, and the author had a listed telephone number there. Huston and the producer John Foreman called him and learned that the film rights remained unsold. Huston then showed the book to Jack Nicholson, who saw it as "a French New Wave archetypical love picture between two killers - you know, deadly but lovely."

But Huston insisted this was a comedy. "I told John, Tve been wanting to work with you," Nicholson recalled, "but I don't know if you want me in a picture I don't understand."

A year later, the film has been released and the misunderstandings are gone. Huston says that "Prizzi's Honor," which opened in the United States on Friday, has the same quality as the book - it walks a very narrow tightrope, it can turn funny and then turn serious." Nicholson, his assessment borne out by the fin-ished product, said, "The man is 78 and he's still working at the top of his form."

"Prizzi's Honor" tells what happens when a stolid Mafia hitman named Charley Partanna (played by Nicholson) becomes smitten with a glamorous mystery woman (Kathleen Turner) who turns out to be a fellow profes-sional. When Nicholson first began work on the film, he still expected to emphasize some of the more wrenching aspects of this situation. For instance, he thought a telephone call Charley makes at a key point in the story might call for a particularly emotional tone, and he engaged the laconic Huston in a rare discussion of the specifies. "I asked him, Where do I go with this scene, am I Pagliacci, am I hysterical, am I in tears, where am I? "Nicholson recalled. "He thought about it and said, 'Well, why don't you just clip your nails?' " Nicholson, in his hotel suite, enthusiastically ate an ice cream sundae as he discussed this, having lost the 30 pounds (13 kilograms) he gained for the Charley Partanna role, "I didn't have to gain weight but I did anyway, because I ingested the part," he said. "I wanted the guy to be a heavy in that sense." Nicholson also adopted a thick Brooklyn accent and a set of new facial mannerisms for the role, and he narrowly escaped having to wear a hairpiece. That was my idea, one of the last things we gave up," said Huston, reached by telephone in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico.

"I like doing away with as much ornamentation as possible, and I felt I'd rather have an accent than Brooklyn accents, Huston told the cast, would be "the voice of the movie." So Nicholson spent a lot of time among Brooklyn cronies he has known for years; so did Anjelica Huston, the direc-tor's daughter and Nicholson's long-time companion, who plays one of the film's pivotal roles. ("Jack was a joy, Kathleen Turner and my daughter, they were all just adorable," Huston said.) One day the director visited his daughand Nicholson at their hotel and introduced them to the actress and playwright Julie Bowho would serve as the film's dialogue coach. Bovasso spoke a few lines in Brooklynese.

Then Huston headed for the window, declaring, "Will you look at this view, kids!" And then he left, thus settling the question of how the dialogue would sound.
"When he doesn't like something, he'll tell you," said his daughter, who plays what she de-scribes as "a girl with some guts."

"When he does, he'll just go on to the next scene." Huston worked so swiftly on "Prizzi's Honor," in fact, that Nicholson said the finished film was a revelation. "I had more one-takes in this picture than I have since I worked with Roger Corman," he said. "And I got a little shook up by the way I looked, so I didn't go to dailies much. So when I saw the first rough cut, it was the closest I've ever come to being in the audience on one of my own movies." What attracted Huston to the material, he said, was "that wonderful hyperbole and extravagance mixed with grandenr that Richard has in all his best books - I thought this one epitomized that. It just demonstrated his whole approach to life and work." Huston had long known Condon, the author of "The Manchurian Candidate"; they met when both lived in Ireland

Another quality that attracted Huston to the material, Nichol-son noted, was the unobtrusive seriousness with which it regards morality and the business world; it compares with Huston's "Beat the Devil" and "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre." "John is interested in the cardinal sins and the cardinal virtues." he said.

Nicholson has often played violent characters, but Charley Partanna was a killer with a difference. "This guy doesn't get off on murder, he's not pathological." the actor said. "This is his job, his morality. I don't play killers sym-pathetically, because I don't sympathize with killing, but this called for something different because it was black comedy. I wanted him to be funny, but I also wanted you to see him kill somebody and for that to be believable. And I didn't want it to seem like two different people."

Something else that was important to him and Huston from the film's first frame was that the teered his services to Fox's adver-

character not radiate Nicholson's usual cunning. "John wanted you to know that the man didn't have a secret plan," he said. "This man had to be primary, simple, dumb and very competent at what he did. The audience couldn't be thinking, 'Oh, Jack's always got a little something up his sleeve,"

Nicholson's attention has been focused on this film partly as a result of the much-publicized abandonment of another: "The Two Jakes," the "Chinatown" sequel he was to make with Robert Evans and Robert Towne, "two of my oldest friends."

"Hey, we had some words, but these are guys who have words anyway." he said. "The sad thing is it's our own goddamn fault. We blew higher than a kite over some pretty minor issues, and we got ourselves too close to a deadline. and we can't be mad at Paramount for that."

tising department for "Prizzi's Honor," coming up with a slogan he said the studio finally decided "looked too sad on the ad." "Killers," he wanted to say of the film's plot and its lethal complications. "You Always Hurt the One You Love."

■ 'A Great American Movie' "Like Woody Allen's 'Purple Rose of Cairo,' the only other great American movie of 1985, Huston's 'Prizzi's Honor' delivers a kind of high most commonly associated with controlled substances, or with works of art of liberating imagination. Vincent Canby wrote in The New York

"This adaptation of Condon's phantasmagorical and witty novel s a breathless roller-coaster ride through a small part of the American Dream that has all the aspects of a funhouse, but it's a funhouse in which the skeletons that jump out at you are still quite fresh. Nicholson's work is as good as anything he's ever done."
